

200 GEORGIANS ENJOY BANQUET

Senator Stone Among Speakers Who Laud State and Its People.

FIRST FEAST OF SOCIETY

Representatives Adamson and Edwards Speak—President Harris Relates Georgia's Achievements.

Nearly 200 Georgians and their friends gathered around the banquet table last night in the ballroom of the Hotel Raleigh at the first annual banquet of the Georgia Society of the District and heard distinguished speakers laud their home State and its people.

William J. Harris, president of the society, acted as toastmaster, and related the achievements of the State, telling of the part its statesmen had played in framing American history. He said that Georgia's sons had done in times of war. The other speakers were Senator Charles A. Stone, Representative William C. Adamson, Representative Charles O. Edwards, W. G. Brantley and Claude Bennett.

The following musical program was rendered: Violin solo, E. W. Ladovitch; vocal solo, Mrs. J. C. Kester, accompanied by Mr. Kester, reading, Mrs. Wain, accompanied by Miss Eva L. Slater. The orchestra was composed of Miss Annie M. Sweeney, Mrs. E. Hoffman and Thomas Sweeney.

Among the guests were: E. G. Mitchell, William Gutcher, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Halstrom, Miss Emma J. Scott, Mrs. John H. Emerson, Mrs. H. E. Hutchins, Mr. John J. McCann, Emily C. Davis, Thomas M. Charles, Julius C. Bradley, Mrs. M. J. Houston, Mrs. A. D. White, Miss J. Houston, Miss M. Reagle, Miss E. J. O'Neil, Mrs. R. O. Jones, Miss Mary Lee, Mr. J. A. Hodges, Reginald Hodgson, Mr. and Mrs. Morcock, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Echols, E. W. Ladovitch, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Neil McGhee, J. M. Webb, Horace Bealer, Mrs. Florence M. Bealer, Dr. Emma Rehn, Bailey, Mrs. Wallace Steator, Miss Jessie Dell, Mrs. Edgar Watkins, Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Mays, S. A. Moreland, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Fendler, John G. Gross, William T. Parrott, Miss Sarah P. Grogan, John Corrigan, Jr., Miss Laura M. Berrian, R. C. Edwards, L. E. Johnson, F. Hunter Crech, W. D. Ferguson, L. B. Mann, and Mrs. M. V. Verduyn, S. M. Grogan, J. King Pickett, Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Denning, D. Matheson, Jr., Miss P. Davis, Willie Howard, Mrs. Fanny Washington, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Johnson, Miss Laura J. Graddick, Miss Lucy L. White, Ann Griffith, Miss Helen Norris, Frederick F. Shrader, W. E. Stevens, M. H. Bunn, J. G. Eubanks, D. E. Moncrief, Jr., Chas. of Jackson School, L. T. Moncrief, Alex. Koplin, Mrs. O. G. Russell, Capt. D. B. Mull, Mr. and Mrs. Gove Porter, Miss Elizabeth Watkins, Louis D. Pace, Mrs. N. C. Napier, Mr. and Mrs. Newton, Representative Eason, former Representative Anderson, W. J. Harris, Mrs. Eugene P. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Brantley, Mr. and Mrs. Claude M. Bennett, H. E. Hutchins and H. L. B. Atkinson.

CITIZENS' BODY SEEKS MEMBERS

Federation Appoints Committee to Seek Affiliation with Associations.

ONE MEMBER ADMITTED

Organization Avoids Taking Part in Controversy Concerning Speed of Ambulances.

The Federation of Citizens' Associations, at a meeting in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce last night, declined to act on the ambulance speed controversy.

PENNSYLVANIA SOCIETY GIVES MUSICAL PROGRAM

Organization Holds Regular Monthly Entertainment in Perpetual Building.

The regular monthly meeting and entertainment of the Pennsylvania Society of the District was held last night in the Perpetual Building, Eleventh and E streets northwest, musical and literary numbers featuring the evening's program. Dancing followed.

The program started with an overture by the Boorman Orchestra, followed by Miss Frances G. Pyle and Laurence Fitzgerald in Spanish dances; Mrs. Joseph Koons, vocal solo; Miss Ethel Garvey, piano solo; Mrs. Marie Willis, recitation; Mrs. B. Stambaugh, vocal solo; Gloria Searles, vocal solo; E. A. Lang, vocal solo; Miss Pyle and Master Fitzgerald, minuet dance; Miss Ruth Ayler, vocal solo; drummer boys of Emory School; Miss M. W. Bauman, recitation; Walter Lewis, piano solo, and William H. Power, vocal solo.

Dr. John S. Arnold presided at the gathering in the absence of the society's president, Samuel R. Stratton. A resolution of sympathy was extended to Mr. Stratton regarding the recent death of his wife, A. A. Reilly was elected a member of the organization.

Commerce Chamber Plans Meeting

Announcement was made yesterday that Senator Chamberlain and Representative Meeker will speak at the meeting of the Washington Chamber of Commerce on April 11. The board of directors of the organization will meet Wednesday.

Socialist Organizer to Talk

Agnes Thekla Fair, of California, Socialist lecturer and organizer, will speak before the Socialist meeting at 313 E street northwest, this evening, on "Women of Tomorrow."

Cigar-Cutter Called Public Health Menace

The United States Public Health Service has issued these health hints:

Do you know that—

Sags in roof-gutters may act as mosquito breeding places?

America's most valuable crop is babies?

The public cigar cutter is a health menace?

The United States Public Health Service maintains a loan library of stereopticon slides?

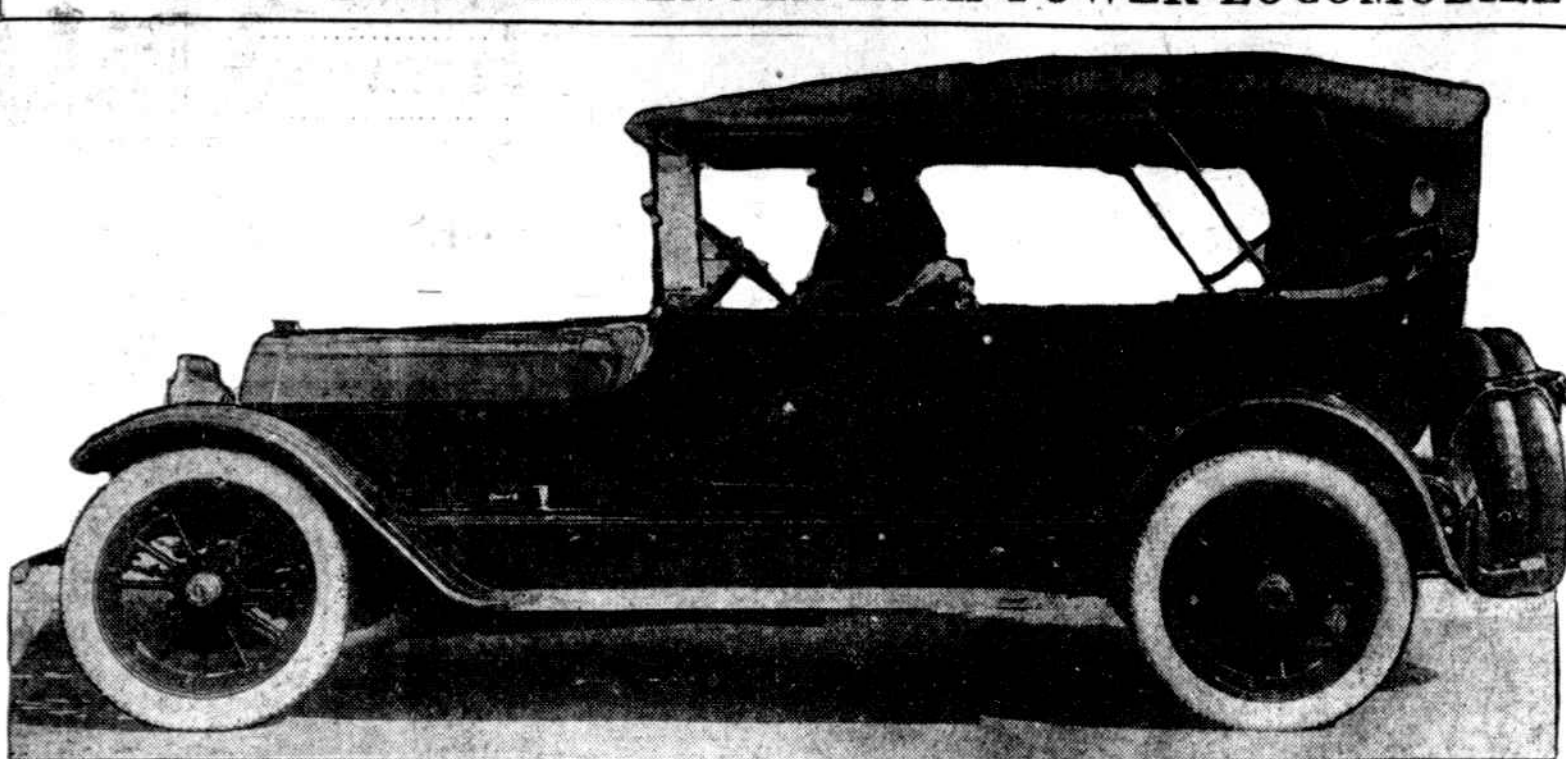

The typhoid rate measures accurately community intelligence?

Whooping cough annually kills over 10,000 Americans?

Bad housing produces bad health?

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is spread by a wood-tick?

SOL. LANSBURGH, OF THE PIONEER MERCHANT FIRM, BUYS SEVEN-PASSENGER HIGH POWER LOCOMOBILE

The local branch of the Locomobile Company of America is much gratified in the recent delivery of one of its touring cars to Mr. Sol. Lansburgh, of the pioneer firm of Washington merchants.

Mr. Lansburgh decided on the Locomobile only after having made a most thorough investigation of the relative merits of all high-grade cars offered for sale in this city; and was so impressed with the enormous strength and great factor of safety as embodied in the Locomobile Company's product, that he unhesitatingly placed his order for that car. Numerous friends owning Locomobiles—in some cases, five and six years old—unhesitatingly recommended the car as the one best suited to Mr. Lansburgh's usage.

The car, a "48" horsepower, seven-passenger model, has been painted to meet Mr. Lansburgh's specifications, and is attracting much attention for its unusual beauty and general expression of elegance and dignity.

BOARD OF TRADE SHAD BAKE WILL BE MAY 20

Annual Outing of Organization to Be Held at Chesapeake Beach.

The annual shad bake of the Washington Board of Trade will be held at Chesapeake Beach on May 20, the shad bake committee of the board decided last night. Arrangements will be made for shooting for 20 persons on the trip. E. J. Murphy is chairman of the committee.

Eight subcommittees have been organized to arrange the affair. Preliminary reports made last night indicate the work will be completed shortly.

WILL PUSH EXCISEMAN CASE

An attempt to force consideration in executive sessions of the Senate of the nomination to the Excise Board of Gen. Robert G. Smith is probably by those who oppose the nomination.

An unfavorable report from the Senate District Committee about two weeks ago has been passed over on the request of one Senator or another at every executive session, and those behind the report are anxious for final action.

ASK $5,000 FOR INJURIES

Winfield Bernhardt and Charles E. Phoenix yesterday filed suits to recover $5,000 each from the City and Suburban Railway Company, alleging an automobile truck in which they were riding was struck by a car of the defendant company, throwing them to the street and permanently injuring them.

SEYMOUR JURY DISAGREES

Mistrial in Case of Actress Charged with Shooting Belboy.

A jury in Criminal Court No. 1, yesterday disagreed in the case of Lucille Seymour, young actress, accused of shooting Lawrence Hartgrove, a colored bellboy, in the Dumbarton Hotel, on the night of February 12.

The jury stood six for acquittal and six for conviction. It is understood. According to the testimony, the Seymour woman and her husband were quarreling when Hartgrove interfered.

The accused woman pleaded she shot in self defense.

THE NORTH CAPITOL AND ECKINGHAM CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION WAS ADMITTED TO THE FEDERATION

The North Capitol and Eckingham Citizens' Association was admitted to the federation, and W. G. Henderson was seated as delegate.

The Tinkham bill to establish a civil service system in the municipal government of the District was brought before the federation by Delegate William McK. Clayton, of Brightwood Park. It was referred to the committee on law and legislation.

A special committee—Herman A. Phillips, W. E. Shannon and William McK. Clayton—was appointed to consider ways and means of bringing into the federation the dozen associations still outside the central body.

Delegate Clayton also introduced a resolution endorsing the Johnson bill to make crossing policemen members of the Metropolitan Department. The resolution was referred to the committee on police and fire protection.

The Brightwood Association sent to the federation a letter of introduction.

GEORGETOWN LADY HAD BEEN IN POOR HEALTH FOR YEARS

Relates How "Dreco" Restored Her. Has No More Gas or Sour Stomach. Is Stronger and Sleeps Well.

"Twenty-five per cent of our educated people die from ignorance" is the recent statement of a noted scientist. "Although paradoxical, the truth of this statement is significant, especially with respect to those who live in the cities."

Washington may be taken as an apt illustration that will apply to American cities in general, where there is a constant bustle and strife to earn a living, to make a fortune, or excel in any line of endeavor. The grind whether of physical labor, mental toil, or the exertions of society, tells upon the nerves of the human structure. The pace is too fast and far astray from the simple plan of nature. After a wide search Dreco was discovered, which is a combination of plants, from the juices of which is extracted a tonic which has proven to be the greatest of all known remedies for the stomach, liver, kidneys and blood. This is now widely known on account of its reviving and reconstructing powers, which is noticeable that the user finds himself infused with new life and energy, as if by magic.

Daily, Dreco is obtaining converts in Washington, which is attested by the signed statements of people who have given it a fair trial. For instance the testimonial of Mrs. Mary Oman of 3239 P street, Georgetown, a well known and popular lady, stated, "For a long time I have suffered with gas forming in my stomach, belching and sourness. I was losing my strength and could not sleep well. I suffered a great deal and dreaded to sit down to the table. Three bottles of Dreco have made a difference in me. I am much stronger, sleep well, and the gas does not bother me any more. I heartily recommend Dreco."

Dreco is sold at all the O'Donnell Drug Stores. Also in Anacostia by Burry's. In Alexandria by Allen's. In Hyattsville by Ford's. Price $1.00—Adv.

1,000 Untrimmed Hemp and Milan Hemp HATS.. 98c

You'll pay $1.50, $2, yes, even $3 for these same Hats in most stores.

Table after table piled high with the greatest assortments ever assembled in one store. New Mushrooms—Roll Brims—Big Sailors, Etc., in black and colors.

Check Suits, Poplin Suits, Serge Suits, Gabardine Suits $14.75

And other smart, up-to-the-minute Spring Suits, in wonderful assortments; novelty tailored models, sport styles and trims; suits for juniors, misses, and women to choose from. $16.50

MILTON R. NEY, 801 PA. AVE. N. W.

URGES MILITARY WORK IN SCHOOLS

Senator Gore Offers Amendment to Army Reorganization Measure.

WOULD TRAIN STUDENTS

Declares Plan Would Turn Out 100,000 Young Soldiers Yearly. Lewis Answers Opponents.

The debate in the Senate yesterday on the army reorganization bill turned upon Federal control of the National Guard.

Senators Pomerene, Borah, and Lewis were the speakers. The bill was laid before the Senate when it met at noon.

Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, introduced an amendment to the bill providing military instruction in schools and colleges.

Explaining his amendment, Gore said: "There are now 14,000 high schools in the United States with an attendance of 800,000 boys. My proposal is that whenever any high school has an enrollment of more than 50 boys above 16 years of age and has as a member of its faculty an instructor qualified in the judgment of the Secretary of War to impart military instruction and training, the general government shall pay not exceeding two-fifths of the salary of such military instructor."

"This is, of course, to be done with the consent of the State and the school board involved, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War. Under this plan 100,000 or more boys trained to arms would issue from these schools annually. They would be easily converted into soldiers. At the same time they would be immersed in the civil population and would not be affected or infected with the spirit of militarism. They would not become impressed with the military caste. They would be citizens first and soldiers afterward, but they would be available in case of national emergency."

Answers Opponents.

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form

of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."

Senator Lewis' argument was directed toward meeting the argument advanced by Senators Nelson and Borah, that the Federal government could not exercise control over the state militia under the Federal constitution. He declared that the power was co-ordinate and the Federal government exercised it in co-ordination with the states.

Senator Borah made a long constitutional argument on the subject.

The fathers nowhere disclosed greater wisdom," said Mr. Borah, "than in those provisions wherein they prepared the country for defense. This was natural in a sense, for they had just come from the battlefield, and such men as Washington and Hamilton sat in the convention. They set about to concentrate the power of government so that those powers could be used effectively and efficiently and successfully in all military matters."

"They had no illusions about a republic remaining at all times in a state of peace because of the fact that it was a republic. They understood very thoroughly by idea that, regardless of the form of government and of the purpose of the government or of the people and of their devotion to peace, there would be times when all the powers of the people must be concentrated into an effective means for the protection of the government and of the people. This convention was perfectly familiar with the weakness of former republican governments wherein there was divided authority and responsibility in military affairs."